Following up on Steve Jobs's promise to bring the "post-PC era" to the U.S. three years ago, Apple's new CEO Tim Cook has outlined Apple's ambitions to go after the "post-PC" market (more on that in a minute). But here's where we get to the problems. Because the creation of a post-PC era is a big deal, and Apple, as one of the "big 3" of PC makers, has been involved from the start, Steve Jobs can be used as a kind of prototype for a new company/market/tech/invention/etc. for companies that have come since and are interested in that kind of thing. But Jony Ive, another Apple alum and the VP of Industrial Design, has clearly stepped into his own role, if Apple is ready to declare victory in the post-PC era. So I think that it is totally fair to say that Apple has given us a clue about where Apple is heading and where Apple's vision for computing might go from here. Ive's first public comment about the Apple Watch, released today, is interesting in that it puts Apple's vision in perspective. By making the first public comments about Apple Watch, in fact, Ive has made a big deal of Apple Watch. But it isn't Apple Watch's function as a smartwatch that interests me. Rather, as Ive says, "the watch uses the same solid gold heart rate sensor that is found in the Apple Watch, but replaces the digital crown with an analog watch face, with a second display at six o'clock displaying information about the day, such as the weather, date and alarm. It is built into the Apple Watch strap, with an easy push-to-switch display, and works whether you're sitting, standing or walking." I've long found Ive's response to things interesting. And this is great. Ive is clearly saying "no, Apple didn't choose this surface for this motion." He says that they didn't design Apple Watch to have a cellular network of sensors built into the surface and then use the Apple Watch as the central hub of a cellular network, but rather that this network is not part of the Apple Watch. Rather, they are separate. For example, the TouchID on the iPhone 5S is not part of Apple Watch (but the iPhone 5S is part of Apple Watch, as is the Apple Watch in fact). If the Apple Watch is a companion to the Apple

The Delhi Police have registered a case of alleged cheating against Union Minister Giriraj Singh and the latter's wife, Neerja Bhanot, a senior government official said on Thursday. The Delhi Police also booked Neerja's assistant, Ram Prakash Gupta, under the Prevention of Corruption Act, the official said. The investigation began after a complaint was filed by a man who alleged that he lost money by lending Rs 3.5 lakh to Singh and his wife, the official said. "The complainant had told us that he got a loan from the two from where he lost money. We have registered a case against the husband, his wife and their PA," a senior police officer said. The minister, who is the leader of the BJP's 21st Lok Sabha group, has over the years earned a reputation for controversial remarks. In the last election, the AAP, which was trailing badly in the national capital, had accused Singh of alleged electoral malpractice, including tampering with ballot papers. Neerja Bhanot was a Home Ministry official posted in Iraq until 2008, according to the ministry's website. The BJP didn't reply to a request for comment.

coverageQ: How to focus textbox when loading I have a textbox for entering the number you want to calculate, and a button to calculate it. How can I focus this textbox when the user clicks the button, but once the calculation is done, it returns back to the initial state? A: Use the SetFocus() method of your TextBox when you want the control to be focused. `TextBox txb = new TextBox(); txb.Focus(); txb.SetFocus();` A: You need to attach the focus as you're doing the event-processing, and then call the Focus() method of the textbox after the event has completed: `TextBox txt = new TextBox(); txt.Text = "foo"; txt.Focus(); // Process event here txt.Focus();` Note that you should usually call Focus() in an event handler, not directly in the main thread. You should call Focus() from a different thread in a separate method or function. It's tricky to do it in the wrong place, and it's
